Q: How to run appium tests with emulator images on different OS I am trying to work with Appium to run my UI automation tests and the test cases are having errors. As per my understanding after upgrading to Java 11 emulator is not working with default app. As i have to run the tests with various OS's, what is the way to add emulator image to my java application? Thanks in advance.

A: run your appium tests on emulator and save the.emulator folder somewhere and keep it secret. copy the.emulator folder to whatever env you want to run your tests. Open Appium remote application and change the emulator there and run your appium script append script and executor which changes the output dir. If you want to remove the.emulator folder and run tests on all environment you can use java option

-Ddave_emulator.emulator.path="" Ref: Q: conditional compilation using extension methods This question is kind of generic (might be)... I want to create extension methods for some class and I want those methods to be compiled depending on some kind of "logic" (i.e. based on some condition defined somewhere else, e.g. when some property of an object equals some value). It might be something like this: public static class MyExtensionMethods { public static string GetMessage(this object src, string key) { return string.Format("{0}: {1}", key, GetValue(src, key)); } public static string GetValue(this object src, string key) { // should this be a conditional compilation? if (someCondition) return "some val1"; return "some val2"; } }

However it seems to be impossible to make a conditional compilation inside an extension method (as far

A: One way to bypass the limitations could be to use the Register Server Exe found at this url: Start a test by opening this as a new Exe file. All you need is the Registry file that has all of the registry entries created while running the Smadav Registration Server. There will be a Load Module Called “regkey.dll” and other various variables that the Registration Server used in the runtime. To create the smallest registry, you could copy everything into a different exe, or you could just open the “regkey.dll” found in the Smadav C:Program Files\Smadav\Registration Server\regkey.dll in a new Notepad to open it, and copy and paste the registry in that file. You may be able to get rid of some of the extra registry entries, but the Smadav Registration Server will still create the entire registry. Mouse lectin, macrophage migration inhibitory factor (MIF), is closely related to cytotoxic T lymphocyte activation. Recent work has shown that cytotoxic T lymphocytes (CTL) produce both soluble molecules, such as lymphotoxin and interferon-gamma (IFN-gamma) and non-lymphoid cell associated molecules, such as perforin and granzymes, that serve to mediate specific cell lysis. Despite this demonstrated activity, the mechanisms of CTL activation remain uncertain. Here we show that macrophage migration inhibitory factor (MIF) is identical to a cDNA isolated from a mouse hybridoma, B4, that produces a growth-promoting factor for a variety of non-lymphoid cell lines. This property of MIF is consistent with the recent discovery that MIF serves to mediate the adhesion of activated T and natural killer cells to endothelial cells. Sequence analysis of the MIF cDNA demonstrated a structural similarity with the recently described C-kinase beta protein from guinea pig macrophages and analysis of the deduced protein product of MIF reveals the presence of a putative cAMP binding domain, catalytic site and a calmodulin binding domain. To study the functional significance of the MIF protein, we used both homologous and heterologous systems to investigate the ability of MIF to stimulate production of the lymphokines IFN-gamma, IL-
